So, "in essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, and in all things charity" is not of Catholic origin via Augustine, nor is it a Protestant idea originating in Meiderlin. Instead it is a quote from one of the most untrustworthy theologians in Church history: a twice-declared heretic who could not seem to unify with anybody!

In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; and, in all things, charity. I came across Richard P. Heitzenrater's chapter, "Unity, Liberty, Charity" in the Wesleyan Heritage while reading through Unity, Liberty, and Charity: Building Bridges under Icy Waters, edited by Donald E. Messer and William J. Abraham.
